Commonly Misunderstood Basketball Rules and Violations:

This is a list of basketball rules that are often misunderstood by coaches, players, and parents. This list is meant to educate and inform players, coaches, and fans.

- The shooter can retrieve their own air ball if the referee considers it to be a shot attempt. The release ends team control. It is not a violation for that player to start another dribble at that point.
- When an airborne player keeps control of an attempted shot that is blocked and is unable to release the ball and returns to the floor with it, that player has not traveled; it is a jump ball.
- There is no three-second count between the release of a shot and the control of a rebound, at which time a new count starts. There is no three-second count during a throw-in and while the ball is in the backcourt.
- The hand is considered part of the ball when the hand is in contact with the ball. This includes holding, dribbling, passing, or even during a shot attempt. Striking a ball handler or a shooter on that player's hand that is incidental to an attempt to play the ball is not a foul, no matter how loud it sounds or how much it hurts.
- A player may slide on the floor while trying to secure a loose ball until that player's momentum stops. At that point that player cannot attempt to get up or rollover. A player securing a ball while on the floor cannot attempt to stand up unless that player starts a dribble. A player in this situation may also pass, shoot, or call a timeout. If the player is flat on their back, that player may sit up without violating.
- Palming or carrying is when a player gains an advantage when the ball comes to rest in the player's hand, and the player either travels with the ball, or dribbles a second time. There is no restriction as to how high a player may bounce the ball, provided the ball does not come to rest in a player's hand.
- The closely guarded rule is in effect in the frontcourt only. The distance to establish it is six feet and the defender must be in legal guarding position (standing upright and waiting for the ball handler to do something is not a legal stance). The count continues even if defenders switch. The five-second count ends when a dribbler gets their head and shoulders ahead of the defender.
- A defensive player does not have to be stationary to draw an offensive charge. A defender may turn away or duck to absorb contact, provided they have already established legal guarding position, which is both feet on the playing court and facing the opponent. The defender can always move backwards or sideways to maintain a legal guarding position and may even have one or both feet off the playing court when contact occurs.
- Goaltending is contacting the ball on its downward flight, above the level of the rim, with a chance to go in. The backboard has nothing to do with goaltending. Slapping the backboard is not basket interference or goaltending and points cannot be awarded.
- The front, top, sides, and bottom of the backboard are all in play. The ball cannot pass over a rectangular backboard from either direction. The back of a backboard is out of bounds as well as the supporting structures.
